NOTES FROM THE APR. 10 MEETING

Curbside Composting Program Expansion

To help Cambridge meet trash reduction goals, the city has expanded the composting program, now allowing all residents in 1-12 unit buildings to responsibly dispose of their food scraps. Michael Orr, Recycling Director at the Department of Public Works (DPW), joined the April 10 ANC meeting to discuss details and answer questions about the program.

According to Mr. Orr’s presentation, Cambridge is working to reduce its trash by 30% in 2020 and by 80% in 2050. In 2008, Cambridge households produced 23 pounds of trash per week. With a focus on recycling and composting, which DPW found comprised 60% of trash, that number is now down to 17.5 pounds. However, there’s more motivating the city than just trash reduction.

“There is nowhere to put trash,” Mr. Orr explained. “The environmental reasons [for composting] are great, but the market is also telling us that we have to compost.”

While the composting program is fairly new to many Cambridge residents, it’s not unfamiliar to the city. Mr. Orr pointed out that from 1952 to 20173, the city had “Honey Wagons” that collected food scraps as an early form of curbside composting. Since the modern program rolled out, DPW has addressed issues of odor and rodent activity by providing bins that feature ventilation and lockable lids.

The city anticipates further expanding the program to 13+ unit buildings beginning in 2019. In the meantime, Mr. Orr suggested that residents download the Zero Waste Cambridge app to get more information on where to dispose of certain items, check pickup schedules, and receive reminders for collection and street sweeping days.

Annual Meeting
The Council will vote to approve the slate for the 2018 ABC Board of Directors. All are invited to attend and meet the Board. Light refreshments, donated by Cambridge Common restaurant, will be served.
Q&A

Q: I live in a multi-unit building, and we have a lot of trash. People throw too much into a container and the lid won’t close, and it attracts critters. I foresee a problem like that with [composting]. Any suggestions?

A: The large composting cart is 35 gallons, and the small one is 12. The small can handle 3 units worth of waste, while the large can handle 9. We can give your building as many bins as it needs. Overflowing hasn’t been an issue as much as forgetting to latch or lock the bin. It’s not any different than trash - it doesn’t matter if it’s segregated or mixed in with the trash - rodents will find [the food waste]. But the compost bins are lockable, so that helps.

Q: Is there any way we can fix the old bins so they lock better?

A: Email me (morr@cambridgema.gov) and we can come swap it out. The new bins have updated locks, and they’re a lot better. The manufacturer was asked to design a bin that could withstand all the raccoons in Toronto.

Q: I work at MIT where we do a lot of composting - we have a bin in our break room. It’s really hard to convince people to put egg shells and such in there. What will compel them?

A: It takes awhile for people to get on board, but eventually it will happen (just like recycling.) One piece of compelling info: there is no end in sight for our trash problems - it’s not easy or cost-effective. Our first priority has been launching the compost program; [next] we will work on ramping up our outreach.

Q: When this program started, I called to find out if I should stop using my garbage disposal - I was told to keep doing that. I don’t use my compost container.

A: We are leaning away from garbage disposals because we have flat pipes in Cambridge, and it could eventually cause a clog. Food scraps with a little bit of grease may even cause a grease clog, which would be a multi-million dollar project to repair. Composting in the bin can help avoid that.

Q: Can you talk a little bit more about the financing? What happens to the compost? Does the city get money for it?

A: [Recycling and composting] are never really as lucrative as people think. Though, it’s 40% cheaper to dispose of than trash. So many different factors go into the cost... it’s a calculus, but it’s definitely going to save money in the long run. Compost costs have gone down while trash costs are going up, so we’re moving in the right direction.

For any questions on the composting program, contact Mr. Orr at morr@cambridgema.gov or (617) 349-4815.

Rising Housing Costs in Cambridge - A Community Discussion

Skip Schiel, longtime Sacramento St. resident, explained his concerns about rising housing costs in Cambridge in an effort to gather ideas, rally the neighborhood, and urge the city to address the issue.

“I’ve lived in the same building since 1989,” he recounted. “It became mixed-income after the loss of rent control. In 1995, my contract rent (what I’d pay without subsidy) rose from $1,300 to $1,700 in just two years, a 30% increase.”

Mr. Schiel noted that this has been a trend in the stretch of buildings that comprise 9-19 Sacramento St., where he lives, despite being managed by Homeowners Rehab, a nonprofit dedicated to developing and supporting mixed-income housing. With two homes on the block undergoing expensive renovations, he wondered what impact this will have on residents.

“Gentrification is leading to displacement,” he said. “I’m worried about what will happen with my rent and my ability to pay it, but also the rest of the city, especially low- and middle-income renters.”

Cambridge City Councillor Sumbul Siddiqui was able to join the meeting via Skype and share some of the priorities and potential strategies discussed in an earlier City Council Housing Committee meeting.

“All of us have real concerns about these displacement problems and what can be done about them,” she began. “We know the city isn’t affordable - so what are the tools in our toolbox to fix this problem?”

She outlined plans for an “Affordable Housing Overlay District,” which means that areas would be rezoned to incentivize the development of affordable housing. Councillor Siddiqui explained that because this plan is such a big undertaking with a lot of unknowns, the Housing Committee and Council have decided it needs more attention, especially to figure out how to provide incentives to affordable housing developers.

Lee Farris, Vice President of the Cambridge Residents Alliance who has also been working with Envision Cambridge, (a community-wide process to develop a comprehensive plan for the city), provided additional insights. She said, once Envision Cambridge has published its housing report, “the city can hit the ground running.”

Ms. Farris also described the “affordable housing overlay” mentioned by Councillor Siddiqui. She said middle-income housing should also be included, but usually that kind of development is only incentivized for affordable housing. Ms. Farris suggested that these issues be discussed publicly, especially regarding changing the density in certain areas, noting that there are trade-offs between open space and affordable housing.

Another attendee brought up the issue of tenant protections, and how that also plays a role in displacement and gentrification, saying that the city has “done nothing to increase protections for market-rate tenants.”

“Cambridge is at the beginning of the conversation of what tenant protections we’d like to see,” they stated. “That has to be part of the solution - not just creating affordable units, because we won’t be able to create enough for all the people who are being displaced.”

A resident who was unable to attend the ANC meeting submitted a letter echoing these sentiments: “If building owners are not acting fairly, make the owners notify [the city] and act humanely,” she wrote.

Another attendee, who is a property owner and landlord, expressed that she was happy to be part of this conversation, that “there isn’t enough dialogue between renters and owners.” She wanted to be able to discuss the issues that matter to her as well as those that interest her tenants.

“I felt stymied actually saying ‘what about neighborhood preservation? What do we like about low density neighborhoods?’” she explained. “I want to be part of the solution [yet also preserve] the parts of Cambridge that make it a wonderful place [to live]. I think it’s important that we all be respectful of different perspectives as we try to get to [a solution].”

Q&A

Q: What is driving the increase in market prices?
A: Supply and demand - but it’s also not that simple. A national/international shift of people wanting to live in cities is a big part of strong demand. Another part is that job structures have changed. Factory jobs are gone and high tech jobs are in, and those folks are well paid, so it’s creating short term friction that people with a lot more money can start to buy neighborhood housing and indirectly displace people. Some landlords raise rents just because they can, and those buildings still get filled because there are a lot more people who can afford those prices.
Q: How do we move forward?
A: Mr. Schiel: I think it would be great if a committee or congress consisting of a variety of stakeholders, such as renters, owners, low/middle income earners, etc., could take seriously the idea of convening the concerns of different stakeholders. I do worry about how quickly we could polarize if one group’s interests get pitted against another’s.

Q: Will these affordable housing projects raise taxes?
A: Fred Meyer, ANC Meeting Chair: A good use of public money is for [affordable housing] . . . higher real estate taxes mean higher revenues for the city. When property values go up, put that money to good use.

Harvard University Updates
Prepared by Tom Lucey, Director of Government & Community Relations

HLS building at 1607 Massachusetts Avenue (former Bence Pharmacy site):

Harvard Law School’s project to redevelop the site on the corner of Massachusetts Avenue and Everett Street remains on schedule to be completed during the fall of 2018. The new structure will be a four-story, 21,000 square foot building with ground floor retail.

The upper three floors of office space will be occupied by Harvard Law School clinical and research programs.

Schedule details include:
- Steel work and installing slabs on the decks for floor plates complete in April 2018
- Installation of building façade; March–July 2018
- Interior fit-out; through August 2018
- Site work; April–July 2018
- Final landscaping and move-in; late fall 2018

There are public realm improvements associated with the project including the replacement of sidewalks on the perimeter of the site. The existing street trees were preserved during construction.
Repairs to Garage Egress Structure at Hammond and Gorham Streets
Beginning in mid-April, new waterproofing will be installed on the garage egress structure located at the corner of Hammond and Gorham Streets. This work will require excavation at the building base on three sides of the structure. The existing landscape elements (arborvitae) that were installed to screen the building will be removed and replanted at the end of the work. It is not the intent to remove any of the trees at this site. Should some arborvitae need to be replaced as a result of the move, new ones will be installed that are similar in height to the existing plants.

Access to Harvard
All Cambridge residents receive free entry to the Harvard Art Museums and are invited to free community events including Observatory Nights at the Harvard-Smithsonian Center for Astrophysics, community days at Harvard sporting events and dozens of performances at the ARTS First Festival.

Temporary Tattoo Contest
As part of the Backyard Block Party, young people and adults alike are encouraged to submit designs to our 2nd annual temporary tattoo contest. Winning designs are chosen via a community vote and the tattoos debut at the Block Party ($1 per tattoo). Creators of winning designers will also receive a small prize.

Guidelines:
1. Each person may submit 1 design.
2. Designs should be between 1 inch and 3 inches on all sides.
3. Light colors like yellow will not show up well on skin, so use bright colors like red, and dark colors like black and purple. If you use a light color, try outlining it in black.
4. Keep the theme of your design kid appropriate, please. ABC staff reserve the right to exclude designs that are deemed inappropriate for children.
5. Email your completed designs to mwoods@agassiz.org by 5:00 PM on Thursday, May 10.

Three Winners
Voting will take place on May 12-16.
• Kid’s pick- chosen by students in ABC and MMA programs
• Community pick- chosen by community members
CHANDLER GALLERY SHOWCASES CRLS PHOTOGRAPHY STUDENTS

There is more to the art of photography than meets the eye. It’s a disciplined study of different techniques, concepts, and mechanisms carefully applied by the artist’s unique vision. It can be intense, but the AP Photography students at Cambridge Rindge and Latin School are up to the challenge. As juniors and seniors with years of analog and digital photography classes under their belts, their current endeavor is to amass a body of work that will prepare them for college-level courses. The next step in that process is to publicly share that work in an exhibit.
