NOTES FROM THE JAN 14 MEETING

Dear Annie, New Restaurant at 1741 Mass. Ave

Dear Annie is an upcoming restaurant and wine bar taking over the space formerly occupied by Nomad at 1741 Massachusetts Ave. Having been approved for zoning, its owners hoped for broader community support ahead of its January 29th License Commission hearing for a beer and wine license.

To introduce Agassiz neighbors to the restaurant and allow them the chance to ask questions or voice concerns, co-owner Lauren Friel, who also owns the Union Square, Somerville wine bar Rebel Rebel, attended the January 14th Agassiz Neighborhood Council meeting. Absent from the meeting were her partners Andrew Brady and Sara Markey, who are co-owners of Union Square’s Field & Vine and also husband and wife.

“What we’re hoping to open is a wine bar and community space,” she told ANC in her introduction. “What we’ve done at Rebel Rebel is become a community activism space for the neighborhood . . . we’re designing [Dear Annie] to do that even more.”

To turn this vision into reality, the restaurant is designed with two sections and inspired by “old school pubs,” as Ms. Friel explained, which means a place where people can “come together to share ideas and information.”

The front section will serve the public seven days a week with a selection of natural wines, specializing in small production farmers both locally and abroad, and a pescetarian food menu, created by Chef and Co-Owner Andrew Brady. Ms. Friel said they intend to serve food that is both less wasteful with ingredients and at an... affordable price point for customers.

The back section of Dear Annie will be a dedicated community-use space, available to book for events such as meetings, book clubs and exhibitions. In total between the two spaces, the restaurant will have a 65 seat capacity.

“We’re trying to create the intimacy like we have at Rebel Rebel,” she said. “In a small space, people are kind of forced to interact with each other, which we find helps galvanize them.”

However, Ms. Friel shared that the intimate space at Rebel Rebel is limiting for its community-oriented goals. She told ANC that the wine bar can’t accommodate all the requests it receives while still serving the public.

“We wanted to create a space that can serve both the public and those who want to participate in events,” she said. “We’re not really providing for the neighborhood if we’re shutting down. [Dear Annie] solves that problem.”

Ms. Friel noted that she and her partners are deeply invested in the neighborhood both as business owners and locals. She’s lived in the Cambridge area herself for “upwards of 20 years.”

For that reason, she emphasized that she and her partners are focused on “holding the integrity” of the neighborhood and bringing “new energy” to it.

After hearing Ms. Friel’s presentation and answers to questions, Joel Bard, long-time Agassiz resident and member of ANC, made a motion to support the restaurant. All voted in favor.

Other interested residents were invited to attend Dear Annie’s license commission meeting on January 29th.

Q&A
Q: How do you envision people reserving the community space?
A: We have someone who does community events at Rebel Rebel named Margot and they are booked with a sliding scale fee. A charity, nonprofit or academic entity can book for a low room fee to cover staffing costs.

Q: Where did the name come from?
A: We wanted something that sounds intimate. We also only employ women at Rebel Rebel and will place female-identifying people in management at Dear Annie. A lot of the work focused on in the community spaces are aligned with the Feminist movement.

Discussion of Neighborhood Name Change
Maya Counter, a senior at Cambridge Rindge and Latin School, joined Agassiz Neighborhood Council to discuss her ongoing effort to change the neighborhood’s name.

She explained to ANC that her interest in renaming the neighborhood began in her AP US History class, where she was asked to research the history of her neighborhood. After coming upon information about the neighborhood’s namesake, Swiss biologist Louis Agassiz, she said she was “disgusted” by what she read, citing the scientist’s racist legacy. After that discovery, Ms. Counter reached out to former City Councilor, now Mayor, Sumbul Siddiqui to discuss how to change the neighborhood’s name.

“She’s given me her full support,” Ms. Counter told ANC. “Now we’re talking about what that might look like, and I want to be more interactive with the community, get a sense of how people feel and generate a constructive conversation.”
This desire is what prompted her to bring the issue to ANC. She had also posted about her project on the social media app NextDoor. Ms. Counter said she is expected to speak on the issue before City Council on February 3rd.

“I just want to know how people feel,” she said. “Feedback is helpful, as well as knowing who I’m up against and who I’m with.”

The conversation was kicked off with a question of how the neighborhood was first named. Attendees debated its origin, with someone proposing that the name could have possibly come from Agassiz’s wife, Elizabeth Cabot Cary Agassiz, who was the co-founder and first president of Radcliffe College.

Community Liaison Phoebe Sinclair, who was moderating the evening’s conversation, shared a note from Charles Sullivan of the Cambridge Historical Commission on the history of naming the Agassiz School, confirming that its name came from Louis Agassiz. Another attendee added that it was common for neighborhoods in Cambridge to be named for the schools they surrounded.

One attendee spoke on the importance of having a conversation about the name change because it can be a “teachable moment,” pointing out that sometimes names are changed without anyone noticing or understanding why.

“I would hope it would be an opportunity to educate,” Ms. Counter said. “It’s also important to recognize that there are many institutions in this country named after bigots, and it doesn’t represent the millions of people of color who live here.”

Tom Meek, who reported on the meeting for Cambridge Day, a web-only news source, shared that City Council recently passed a motion by Denise E. Simmons that will reevaluate all names of Cambridge buildings, streets, and institutions to determine if they are indirectly or directly related to the slave trade and change them through due process. Ms. Counter said she had already connected with Ms. Simmons about their common goals, and the two are working together.

Some suggested providing some context for the name, instead of changing it, or selecting a different member of the Agassiz family as the namesake, but Ms. Counter said she didn’t feel it would be as effective.

“I hear people mentioning his daughter and his wife, and it just sounds like people want to keep the Agassiz history, even knowing about his racism,” she said. “His science was rooted in racism.”

“I don’t think a neighborhood has the ability to put up a sign at every point of entry to explain why the name is still Agassiz,” neighborhood resident Meg Salocks added. “I understand the motivation to put better context behind the name, but I don’t think a neighborhood is the space for that.”

ANC Moderator Fred Meyer brought up a counterargument that others said was often used in the process of renaming the elementary school: Other places and institutions are named after historical figures with racist histories. He specifically named George Washington and Abraham Lincoln as examples.

“You can’t get get rid of Lincoln or Washington, but you can put them in perspective,” Ms. Counter said. The platforms to educate the public on these figures are far larger, she said, which isn’t the case for Agassiz.

While the beginning of the conversation focused on history and Ms. Counter’s motivations, it later became a discussion of what the process of renaming would look like. Her short timeline was of concern to some, as her City Council meeting was dated for two weeks after the ANC meeting. Agassiz resident Kate Frank advised Ms. Counter to not rush through the process.
“There’s no reason to treat it like an emergency,” she said. “You would not want unnecessary opposition if the opposition isn’t to the concept.”

Ms. Frank noted that other entities carrying the name based on the neighborhood may need to change as well, and that takes time and money. Maria LaPage, Executive Director of Agassiz Baldwin Community, thanked Ms. Frank for bringing up that point but added that she felt burdened by the Agassiz name.

“It always seems like sort of a drag on our mission to be an inclusive, welcoming place,” Ms. LaPage said. “I acknowledge that it’s work and energy to change our name if the neighborhood name changes, but it’s work I’m willing to do.”

Among a few attendees, there was a concern about not including enough voices from the neighborhood in the process. They suggested a larger forum for members of the community to discuss the issue or other, more remotely accessible, options for the neighborhood to provide feedback.

“Cambridge has a participatory budgeting process, so there are models for participatory involvement,” Jonathan Lehrich, a member of ABC Board of Directors and neighborhood resident, said.

Others noted that opportunities for more residents to engage in the process could be a boon to Ms. Counter’s chances for support from City Council.

In place of Agassiz, Ms. Counter wants to name the neighborhood after Maria L. Baldwin, the African American educator and first black female principal in Massachusetts and the Northeast for whom the elementary school is now named. She said she’s open to hearing other options but emphasized that having the neighborhood named Baldwin is her ultimate goal.

While there was some discord over how to change the name or what to change it to, there seemed to be general support for at least removing Louis Agassiz as the neighborhood’s namesake.

Ms. Counter shared that her next step is to meet with City Councilor Simmons and Mayor Siddiqui before meeting with City Council.

To officially record ANC’s support, Joel Bard proposed the following motion, which was seconded and voted on unanimously:

"There is a strong consensus in the neighborhood council in support of a name change, to be discussed in forums over the coming months with an opportunity to educate neighbors about the relevant issues, with the objective to come up with a recommended name from the neighborhood."

DISEASED BEECH TREE REMOVED FROM OXFORD ST.
Prepared by Thomas J. Lucey, Harvard University Director of Government & Community Relations

Despite the best efforts of our arborists and landscaping personnel, the Beech tree located on the parcel adjacent to Oxford Street near Pierce Hall has been deemed a public safety hazard and will need to be removed.

Unfortunately, the tree is compromised by multiple afflictions, which pose significant risks to the tree’s structural integrity. In an effort to ensure that all available resources were utilized on behalf of the tree, an independent arborist and the City of Cambridge’s arborist were consulted and agreed that the tree cannot be saved.

In the spring, three new specimens will be planted based on their suitability to the site along with the goal of replacing and expanding the tree canopy. Experts consider these new specimens, a tulip tree; a yellowwood; and a dawn redwood, extremely well-suited for the site.

When the tree began showing signs of distress a few years ago, an Arnold Arboretum plant propagator was invited to take cuttings. From those original cuttings, we were able to rear five healthy grafts. Those offspring are now 2 to 3 feet tall, enjoying life in 3-gallon containers on the Arboretum campus and will soon become part of Harvard’s campus. In addition, some of the wood from the felled tree will be salvaged, if possible, for still-to-be-determined future use.

REMEMBERING RICHARD GRIFFIN

Richard B. Griffin of Howland Street, died peacefully at home on January 20, 2020, at the age of 91. Beloved husband of Susan Keane, and devoted father of Emily Griffin, he was preceded in death by his parents, John H. Griffin and Alice (Barry) Griffin; by his brother, John H. Griffin Jr.; by his sister-in-law, Joanne Griffin; and by his nephews Stephen Griffin and Gregory Griffin. He is survived by his wife and daughter, and by four siblings: Sister Maureen Griffin, SNDdeN.; Kevin B. Griffin; Carol M. Griffin; and Gerald G. Griffin; his sisters-in-law Mary Rose Griffin and Wynne Griffin; and by three generations of nieces and nephews.

Richard was born in Peabody, Massachusetts, on August 19, 1928. He grew up in Belmont and Watertown, attending public schools and St. Sebastian’s School. He was a member of the Harvard Class of 1951, but left the College after two years to enter the Society of Jesus. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1962, a year marked by the opening session of Vatican II. Richard enthusiastically embraced the teachings of the Council, and its spirit would mark him for the rest of his life.

From 1968 to 1975, at the height of the civil rights movement and the Vietnam War, Richard was Catholic chaplain at Harvard, where he inspired many members of the community and displeased others. At the same time, he had begun to question his vocation to the priesthood. In 1975 he was released from his vows and left the Jesuits, while retaining lifelong ties of friendship to the Jesuit community.

The rest of Richard’s career was marked by profound engagement in the field of aging: first as the director of the Cambridge Council on Aging, and then as a journalist, producing weekly columns for the Cambridge Chronicle. Marriage and fatherhood brought him great joy, and he loved nothing better than conversations with new and old friends. A friend characterized this activity as a ministry of friendship, and he continued to exercise it to the end of his life.

ABC Remembers Richard Griffin
Richard attended countless community events, Neighborhood Council meetings, and was frequently seen learning new technological tricks at the Living Well Network weekly Computer Lounge.
